1. Research and Focus

The project is based on Tivoli's ambition to strengthen emotional loyalty among young adult annual pass holders. The aim is to explore what motivates 20-30-year-olds with an annual pass to visit more often and build a stronger relationship with Tivoli through social and recurring experiences.

The research focused on motivations, barriers, social needs, and use of Tivoli's existing offers and digital solutions. Using desk research, a questionnaire, observations, interviews, and affinity mapping, we examined their relationship with Tivoli and the annual pass.

2. Key Insights

The research shows that having an annual pass does not automatically lead to frequent visits. The pass removes the entrance barrier, but not the decision barrier. The target group mainly visits when there is a clear reason to go, such as concerts, events, or plans with friends or partners. Price, crowds, distance, and limited awareness of Tivoli's offerings can discourage visits. This shows a need to make experiences more visible, create social occasions, and simplify planning.

3. The Digital Concept

Based on these insights, we developed Tivoli Moments, a digital loyalty concept for 20-30-year-old annual pass holders. It encourages social visits and provides inspiration throughout the visit. Users can discover events, plan visits with friends, and receive personalized summaries of their Tivoli experiences.

The concept combines a social calendar, friend invitations, personalised Tivoli Moments, photobooths in the garden, and social media communication. These features create more touchpoints with Tivoli and clearer reasons to return.

4. User Value and Conclusion

The concept responds to the target group's need for inspiration, concrete occasions, and easier social planning. Our research shows that users value shared experiences but often lack a specific reason to visit, even with an annual pass. Simply being able to walk through Tivoli is not always enough to motivate a visit.

User value lies in addressing key challenges: limited communication and social media presence, a perception that not enough is happening, limited overview of activities, and difficulty getting friends to join. Tivoli Moments aims to make Tivoli more visible and relevant in everyday life while making it easier to discover, plan, and share experiences with others.
